EUROCITIES is becoming the number one platform for knowledge sharing, and Europe’s most recognised urban voice. To accelerate this trajectory, we make use of EU-funded projects.

These create added value for our members and contribute to policy and forum work, by providing additional staff resources and relevant activities. For example, our evidence-building projects collect data and case studies which can be useful for our advocacy work. One of EUROCITIES’ projects greatest assets is to provide the necessary resources to organise knowledge-sharing activities, where cities can share their expertise with each other. Knowledge-sharing also takes the form of capacity-building activities, including webinars, toolkits for cities and training sessions which often take place alongside forum meetings.

The launching of the new calls of the Horizon 2020 programme for research and innovation is expected on 27 October 2017. The work programmes will include the 2018-2019 calls and a draft description of the 2020 calls. This gives EUROCITIES a clear timeline for planning new projects priorities and activities.

The autumn forums are an opportunity to discuss priorities for EU-funded projects with members. We want to co-create with our members, future projects that bring real added value for EUROCITIES forums and working groups and will support these to deliver more tangible outputs.

During dedicated discussion spaces, EUROCITIES members will be asked to:

• Helping to identify project priorities areas which are in line with the objectives of their forums and working groups (i.e. smart cities, circular economy, youth employment, creative industries, ...);
• Brainstorming on future project activities which would complement the objectives of their forums and Working groups (i.e. collection of city’s needs, exchange of best practice, creation of toolkits or other training activities);
• Presenting their city projects priorities;
• Mentioning if they plan to include EUROCITIES in a future project proposal.

In order to facilitate the discussion, the following document provides a preliminary list of calls potentially interesting for EUROCITIES members.

The document is based on the draft version of the H2020 work packages. Changes are still possible until the formal publication of the calls on the H2020 website.
